The signing ceremony was held on the HKU campus, attended by Professor Xiang Zhang, President and Vice-Chancellor of HKU, and Mr. Jianmin Miao, Chairman of CMG. Other guests included Professor Max Shen, Vice President and Pro-Vice-Chancellor (Research); Professor Qiang Zhou, Dean of the Faculty of Science; Professor Chi-Ming Che, Laboratory Director of the State Key Laboratory of Synthetic Chemistry; Professor Xuechen Li, Associate Dean of the Faculty of Science, at HKU; Mr. Renjie Deng, Executive Vice President, and Mr. Junli Zhang, Assistant General Manager and Office Director, at CMG.

According to the agreement, HKU and CMG together with its subsidiary the Tianjin Institute of Pharmaceutical Research (TIPR) aim to leverage the strengths of both parties to advance innovation in the biopharmaceutical field and bring significant progress to peptide drug research in the future. In the event, HKU's state key laboratory for synthetic chemistry and the Tianjin Institute of Pharmaceutical Research 's state key laboratory have also signed the strategic collaboration.

Professor Xuechen Li highlighted the significance of collaboration, stating that it offers a unique opportunity to translate research findings into practical applications, underscoring the importance of academia-industry partnership in driving scientific innovation.

In his concluding speech, Professor Max Shen stated that this collaboration demonstrates China Merchants Group's commitment to innovative research. He expressed his anticipation for enhancing cooperation with China Merchants Group to promote further research. Professor Shen also envisions further collaboration between the University and the industry to drive innovation and entrepreneurship development in both Hong Kong and the Greater Bay Area.
